

Toady of the Year (2014)

Rt Hon David Cameron MP

Toady n a sycophant, an obsequious flatterer; vt and vi to fawn on and flatter like a sycophant

Justice for men & boys (and the women who love them)<sup>1</sup> presents David Cameron with his third successive ‘Toady of the Year’ award, in recognition of his continuing pursuit of radical feminist agendas, regardless of the costs to British men, women, and children. Under his leadership the state has been as hostile towards marriage and the nuclear family – and fathers in particular – as the Labour administrations of 1997-2010, yet he stated on 18 August 2014 (less than nine months before the next general election) that legislation would in future be assessed for its impact on families. This cynical attempt to appeal to the traditional Conservatives he’s treated with utter contempt since being elected leader in 2005 prompted a powerful article<sup>2</sup> by an important anti-feminist blogger, Herbert Purdy. Mr Purdy also wrote an article<sup>3</sup> pointing to the role that the decline of nuclear families, with the inevitable impact on fathers’ relationships with their children, had played in enabling the sexual exploitation of over 1,400 young women and girls in Rotherham over many years.
