

Gretchen Kelly

Whiny Feminist of the Month

J4MB presents the Whiny Feminist of the Month award (May 2017) to Gretchen Kelly, an American woman, for her article Women Are Not Here For You. You Do Not Own Us. A short extract from her lengthy whinefest, reminiscent of the witterings of Andrea Dworkin:

Ownership. Women are property. Men are entitled to us. Society is unconcerned with our agency and autonomy.

It's tradition and it's doctrine. It's history and it's gospel.

It's the marrying off of daughters as a transaction. A young girl whittled down to the equivalent of a goat and an acre of land.

Whining is a cornerstone of feminism. It's generally an indicator of a failure to transition fully from childhood into adulthood, and it's no surprise to find almost all feminists are relentlessly whiny. Feminists whine in order to shame men and manipulate them into doing their bidding, however ridiculous that bidding might be.

Ms Gretchen is now a member of The Whine Club.

The Whiny Feminist of the Month award is one of a number presented by J4MB on an occasional basis. Others include Lying Feminist of the Month, Gormless Feminist of the Month, and Toxic Feminist of the Month.
