So, a reasonable person might ask, where are the women speaking out against female violence, and doing something to challenge it? Well, there's Erin Pizzey, 84, just awarded a CBE - how did THAT slip past the feminists who vet the honours lists? She's been telling stark truths about domestic violence - including that it's not a gendered issue, and never has been - for 50+ years.

Erin's keynote speech (video, 38:05) at the 2016 International Conference on Men's Issues, in London <http://icmi2016.icmi.info> was titled 'Intergenerational Family Violence v. The Big Lie' (video, 38:05): <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=D73v1IKcMo&list=PLjMscr0TpRqjivYVcMdSEl5maZI2ttgkG&index=1>

Why do feminists NEVER speak out against female violence? Perhaps because:

(a) They know (but can never admit) that the most violent couples are lesbian couples, and women are almost twice as likely to be abused by female partners than by male partners (ONS figures): <https://f4mb.org.uk/2022/12/09/are-women-more-likely-to-be-abused-in-lesbian-or-heterosexual-relationships/>

(b) It would undermine the fraudulent domestic violence industry, a goldmine for feminists for 50+ years.
